- I went down to the town barn last week and the power was turned off to the used oil burner. I asked the men to turn it on and get it running for me to see how it worked. It had to be reset to run once the power had been turned off. They got it working and I asked them to leave it on so it can do its job. I was under the impression that is what we purchased it for. A couple days later I stopped, and the power had been shut back off. That Saturday the temp dropped to -8% if something went wrong with the boiler, we would have no heat. I would like to see the power be left on and the thermostat to be set at least 55. What does the board think?
